MINING LAWS

The enectment of mining laws, prospective and retro spective, was the chief topic of discussion before the ses sions in Philadelphia of the American Mining Congress In his annual address, the president measured out praise and blame to recent laws in apparent equal quantity. He commended workmen's compensation acts as beneficini to both operators and miners and especially to the intter. The only injury, in his opinion has been to lawyers who formerly took damage suits on contingent fees His view was that if such laws become general and uniform they will be successful and just, for it is no more than right that the injury to persons employed in a necessarily bazardous enterprise should be borne as part of the fixed expenses of the business and added to

A proper compensation act provides the most equitable and inexpensive method of fixing damages and distribut ing of componsation, but the president was severe in his strictures on some of the recent laws ostensibly designed to promote safety. He declared that many of these were without value and that compliance with their provisions
